TO THE PUBLIC.

With this number we assume the management of the BELLEFONTE REPUBLICAN. The paper was suspended December 4th, 1872; the office was bought by Gen. Beaver and seven others, and purchased by us January 6th, 1873.

We commence the management under peculiar difficulties, owing to the sudden suspension of the paper and the confused state in which we find affairs.

We have secured the services of Mr. R. B. Barger, the former proprietor, who will be pleased to welcome back his old friends, and with whose assistance we hope soon to systematize the business of the office.

We cannot, for want of time, issue our paper full size this week; but on and after our next publication day, the paper will appear in its regular form.

That our patrons may not suffer loss, we will send the paper to all who have paid in advance until the expiration of their terms of subscription, and shall also fulfil all the advertising contracts.

The REPUBLICAN will continue to be the firm, unflinching advocate of true Republican doctrines. We shall devote ourselves to the best interests of the party in the County, State and Nation, and energetically and persistently support the party nominations, not having any policy of our own contrary to the will of the people; at the same time we shall fearlessly denounce corruption and all forms of wrong-doing, whether of high or low degree, and all matters of interest in County, State or National politics will receive our careful attention.

In our general news items, we shall chronicle all important incidents on any part of the globe, presenting each week to our readers a mirror of passing events.

We are entire strangers among you, therefore, our local columns, for the first few weeks, may not be as complete as we ourselves could wish; but as we shall give this department special attention we shall soon have matters so systematized that no item of local interest will escape our notice. We shall be pleased to have any friend of the paper send us any matter of interest that may come under their notice, and we will put it in proper shape for publication.

As an advertising medium, the REPUBLICAN is unsurpassed by any other paper in Central Pennsylvania. The circulation is already very large, and no pains will be spared to increase it. Advertisers may feel assured that, through our columns, they will reach a very large number of those whose patronage they wish to sollicit.

We intend to make ourselves very industrious in our solicitations and we want all to be ready to receive us, or at once send in their subscriptions, and if any of the former friends and patrons of the paper have been neglected or forgotten, will at once make the same known to us, they will be attended to at once.

We would also call the attention of our readers to the fact that we are prepared to do book, card and job work, and ornamental and fancy printing in all its various branches. We are supplied with the very best assortment of job and poster type, and the latest improved job and power presses. Having spent a life time in this business in Boston and New York, and having an office filled with the very best material for doing any kind of work that may be entrusted to our care, we shall not allow any one to excel us either in city or country offices.

Taking for our watchword, perseverentia omnia vincit, we know that success is certain.

CHANGE OF BASE.—Mr. B. F. Batcheller, of this place, has been elected Superintendent of the Lock Haven Boot & Shoe Manufacturing Co. This, we have no doubt, will be a change for the better, as Mr. Batcheller brings the fruit of twenty year's experience to the task. As a thorough and practical business man, as well as a genial and social gentleman, Mr. Batcheller is well known in Bellefonte. This company, which is composed of some of the wealthiest and most substantial business men of Lock Haven, has been in operation about one year, and is well known throughout this State. We congratulate them upon the acquisition they have made, and feel confident of the success of the new management, as we are sure they have got the right man in the right place.

We will also say, that by referring to our advertising columns, our readers will see that Mr. B. does not intend to neglect or give up his business at this place and Altoona.

SAD OCCURRENCE.

A YOUNG LADY FALLS DEAD IN CHURCH A FEW MINUTES AFTER BEING CONFIRMED.

On Christmas morning, says the Savannah News, one of the saddest and most appalling incidents occurred at Christ Church that has been known in this city. The morning services had been concluded, and the candidates for confirmation, ten in number, were invited to the altar.

Of these was Miss Lizzie Spencer, a most estimable young lady, about sixteen years of age, daughter of Captain W. H. Spencer, who was occupying a seat in the middle of the gallery to the right on entering the church. She approached the altar with the others, and was confirmed according to the rites of the church by Right Rev. Bishop Beckwith. After the confirmation ceremonies Miss Spencer returned to her seat in the gallery, and had scarcely taken it when her head fell forward on the railing.

Those in the vicinity attached no significance to this, imagining that it was merely an act of devotion, when suddenly the young lady sank from her seat, and would have fallen upon the floor, but for the promptness of Dr. W. H. Elliott, who caught her. Gentlemen immediately approached and assisted in carrying her from the church. The general inference was that the young lady, overcome by her feelings, had fainted. Alas! such was not the case. The gentlemen who were tenderly leaving the almost lifeless form, noticed, on going down the stairs, that the gasps which now and then shook the frame grew fainter and fainter on reaching the vestibule.

A conveyance was at once procured, and the lifeless form of the young lady was taken to her father's residence on Liberty street.

The announcement of this sad and melancholy ending of a life just dedicated to the service of the Lord sent a thrill of solemn grief through the congregation.

Bishop Beckwith alluded to the visitation of Providence in the most feeling manner, and expressed the hope that all present might be as fully prepared to appear before their Maker when summoned, as he believed the young lady was, who but a few minutes before had stood before the altar in the freshness and glory of youth. His remarks touching the uncertainty of life, as illustrated by this sad incident, were very impressive, and were deeply felt by the congregation.

ACCIDENT.—A most distressing accident occurred at Curtis Hile's, in Benner township, which resulted in the death of George Miller, a young man about nineteen years of age. Mr. Miller was assisting in threshing grain with a large separator. In attempting to step over the shafting his clothing was caught which wrapped around the shaft, throwing him several times violently around it, crushing his head so much that he died on Saturday evening last. He was warned not to cross the shaft, but in spite of what had been said to him he sat on it once during the day, while in operation. One more warning to careless persons.

ADAM DECKER, JR., of Walker township—Nittany Post Office—called at our office, last Monday, and subscribed for the REPUBLICAN, paying us one year in advance, and has the honor of being the first susbcriber under the new administration of affairs.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

John Dorrimer had not a cent in the world, and nothing but his profession upon which to depend. He had studied medicine with his father, who had a practice barely sufficient to keep him above actual want; upon the death of the latter, the young man was left to earn his own living. How difficult that is, for a man without friends or a start, few who have not been compelled to try the experiment can realize.

Handsome in form and feature, intelligent and educated, willing to work, no matter how hard, for a competence, John Dorrimer found himself, one cold winter night, actually without the means to buy a crust of bread. He sat in his miserably furnished office in one of the east side streets of New York, discouraged, hungry and desperate. He had not tasted a morsel of food during the entire day; his fire and stock of coal were out, hunger and cold were making him desperate.

"I mustn't sit here and freeze," he exclaimed at length. "A walk will keep me warm, if it don't feed me."

Sick and dispirited, he left the shabby room which sheltered him. It was a cold, pitiless night that sought out every corner and nook, and filled them with a biting cold. The wind went roaring and sweeping through the streets, and through the thin garments of John Dorrimer it sported with wild glee. It sent sharp throbs of pain through his form, and as it raged about wilder and more gleeful, it filled his half crazed mind with a vague desire for rest of some kind, even if it had to be the rest of death, and then started off in a bewildered and frenzied search of it.

At that moment a man darted suddenly from an obscure alley, and passed him at full speed. Then came a cry and a shout, and the rapid trampling of feet, and in another moment the solitude of the street grew instinct and massed with life.

"Where is he?" cried a dozen voices to Dorrimer; "which street did the robber take?"

But he could not answer; his nerves were unstrung, and his dizzy brain swam and reeled, and the faces which peered upon him, and the voices which yelled in his ears, were to him as the forms and sounds of a ghastly world. His head drooped upon his bosom—he clung to a railing for support. The crowd passed on—they were in pursuit of guilt; what to them was virtue they could have supported or the family they could have relieved? But they knew not his distress nor the extent of his weakness, or some one would have tarried and aided, for there is, after all, as much kindness as cruelty in our nature. Perhaps they thought it was only some intoxicated and maudlin idler; or perhaps, in the heat of their pursuit, they thought not at all.

"The fellow, whoever he is or whatever he had done, seems likely to escape," mused Dr. Dorrimer. "There is vice prospering and here is virtue starving. No. I'll not starve! I'll do as he has done. The street is dark here and deserted now. The next man or woman who passes shall furnish money for a meal!"

Stepping back into the shadow of a building, he warily waited for his prey.

Just then the sound of furiously driven wheels caught his ear, and a moment later two horses attached to a carriage dashed around the corner, and the carriage was thrown heavily over. Dr. Dorrimer ran to the wreck, where he found the two occupants of the carriage—a man and a woman—lying amid the debris. The former staggered to his feet, but little, if any, injured, while the lady lay as still as if dead.

Dr. Dorrimer and the man lifted her slight form gently and bore it, at the doctor's suggestion, into a drug store near at hand. There he soon succeeded in recalling her to consciousness, but it was evident that she was very severely injured. An arm was broken, and there were many cruel bruises. When she had so far revived as to render her removal feasible, a carriage was ordered to take her home.

"And if you will accompany us," said the man to Dr. Dorrimer, "you will add to the already great favor you have done us. My name is Lancaster—Herbert Lancaster—and this is my wife."

The young doctor now looked at his patient's face closely for the first time, for before he had been to busy in attending to her hurts to observe critically. He now saw a rather dark but strikingly handsome face, its perfection of contour and feature being strongly set forth by the pallor that overspread it.

"Certainly; I shall be pleased to attend her, if you desire it;" said Mr. Dorrimer, who had previously told Mr. Lancaster that he was a physician.—"The lady's injuries, although not dangerous, require immediate attention."

The two men easily carried the injured girl—for she was not more than seventeen, although a wife—to the carriage and all three were driven to the Lancaster mansion, which held its own in point of elegance among blocks of brown stone structures in a fashionable uptown street. Then she was put to bed and her injuries more carefully dressed by Dr. Dorrimer, whose evident skill seemed to please the anxious husband. She was somewhat feverish, and required careful attention.

"Will you stay with her to night?" asked the husband.

"Her condition requires it," was the reply. It was past midnight when Mrs. Lancaster fell asleep, and the two watchers withdrew. The husband ordered a lunch, over the eating of which he expressed his thanks to the young doctor; but he did not know how much his guest needed the food that was set before him, nor how refreshed he felt after it.

In the morning Mrs. Lancaster was in a fever, and Dr. Dorrimer at the husband's urgent solicitation, took professional charge of the case, devoting nearly his whole time to it, and taking his meals in the house.

When two weeks had passed, and the patient was beyond all danger, the young doctor found that the accident had put him upon the road to an extensive practice. The Lancasters were fashionable, rich and widely known in society.—Their patronage of Dr. Dorrimer was a sufficient guarantee, and he found calls for his services pouring in at a highly remunerative rate. Within six months he became established in elegant quarters and was not only professionally but socially known in fashionable circles. Good looks and attractive social qualities won many friends; and with it all he could not but look back upon the night of the accident as the turning point in his life.

But from that evening also dated the growth of another important and less fortunate element in his life—love for Jessie Lancaster. From their first meeting, when she lay maimed and suffering her face had never been out of his mind. During her illness she had unconsciously revealed to him a nature so fine and womanly, yet so strong and passionate, that he soon found himself setting her up as an idol in his heart. And how secretly and devotedly he worshipped it, until the possession of her love became a supposed ambition, a never expected goal, which he only reached in his dreams.

The husband suspected nothing of this, for Dr. Dorrimer guarded every avenue that could lead to suspicion; but not so with Jessie. Her eyes were those of a woman, and she read the unspoken love from its incipiency until it became an overpowering passion. In her own passionate breast she reciprocated the sentiment, but she proved more adept, for a time at least, in hiding it. Her marriage had been arranged with less reference to hearts than to purses, and her husband held no stronger sentiments toward her than respect and admiration.

But Dr. Dorrimer and Jessie were too much together, and their mutual passion too rapid and strong of growth, to be long kept smouldering. So long as Dr. Dorrimer did not know his love to be returned, self-respect and respect for her sealed his lips; but when he saw at last the truth, impetuosity overcame discretion.

"Jessie," he said, when left alone with her one day, "what is to come of all this?"

"Of what?" she asked, half guessing his meaning.

"Of our love, Jessie, it is true that your lips have never spoken it, but your eyes your manner, a hundred things, have told me, that you love me—love me as I you. Jessie, what is to come of it?"

Jessie did not reply. Her face flushed and her eyes dropped, but she made no denial. Her lover came to her, drew her to his breast, and her head sank on his shoulder.

"What is to come of it, Jessie?" he repeated. "We can't go on this way. Either I must leave the city and never see you again, or you must be wholly mine."

No reply came from the red lips, between which the hot breath came excitedly; but the slight form nestled closer in the arms that so closely held it.

"It is useless for us to close our eyes to the truth," continued Dr. Dorrimer; "we love each other so well that there must be a final parting, or no parting at all. Which shall it be?"

This time the heart of the girl spoke the answer.

"I cannot live without you. Take me away with you; I cannot give you up!"

Their lips met in their first kiss, and their happiness shut out all thought of the husband whose confidence they were abusing. Both were young and impulsive, and to them it was natural that prompt action should follow a resolution. Carried away by her frank avowal of her passion, Dr. Dorrimer had now no thought of relinquishing the fruition of his wildest dreams. He proposed an immediate elopement, and needed no pictures of a happy life in other lands to win the consent of the infatuated wife. Details were speedily settled. On the following day Mr. Lancaster would start on a week's business trip. They would take advantage of that fact, and embark in the same day's outward-bound steamer for Europe. Their hastily matured plan had hardly been completed when the husband's step was heard in the hall, followed by his entrance into the drawing-room. Soon afterward Dr. Dorrimer took his leave.

On the following morning Mr. Lancaster went away, as expected, and Jessie, her brain in a whirl of excitement, went about the preparations for the elopement. Her lover was to call with a close carriage in time to catch the steamer, in which he was to engage passages under assumed names.

The hour passed until the appointed time arrived, and still Dr. Dorrimer did not come. Jessie went to the window several times, but no carriage came. Finally there was a ring at the door bell, and then a servant brought her a note. It was in the well known handwriting of her lover, and she nervously tore it open.

"My dear Jessie," she read, "the delirium is passed, and in my returning senses, and away from you, I can think a little more calmly. I can remember how, but a few months ago, your patronage and influence saved me from actual want—perhaps from crime—for hunger had impelled me to decide upon robbery on the night of the accident. Now I have the opportunity to repay the debt by saving you from the crime and shame of elopement. Yesterday, my love for you made me forget all this; but now I am resolved for your sake, to level all the bright castles I had built. It is best that we should only meet hereafter in the presence of others. This is a heavy blow for me to inflict upon you and myself, my own darling, but love for you counsels it."

Indignation was the first sentiment exerted by this note in Jessie; then came grief at the rude crushing of her fondest hopes, and finally gratitude for having been saved from a rash and wicked act.

Three years later Jessie Lancaster stood by the coffin of her dead husband. During the interval, she had seldom seen Dr. Dorrimer, and then only in the society of others. She had tried hard to banish from her heart the forbidden love, and had so far succeeded as to remain loyal to her husband, for whom, if she had borne no deep love, she could at least mourn the loss of a dear friend.

After a fitting lapse of time, Dr. Dorrimer resumed their broken friendship, and each found the love for the other a smouldering fire, that only needed renewed companionship to be fanned into a blaze again. But this time there was no bar to their union and their marriage was the prelude to an honorable and happy married life.

Age of the Presidents.

Gen. Grant is one of three of our Presidents who have passed their fiftieth birth days in the highest place an American can reach, the other two being Mr. Polk, who entered the office about seven months before he was fifty years old, and Gen. Pierce, who become President in his forty-ninth year.

Gen Washington was in his fifty eight year when he became President. John Adams was in his sixty second, Mr. Jefferson was in his fifty-eighth, Mr. Maddison in his fifty eighth, Mr. Monroe in his fifty-ninth, John Quincy Adams in his fifty eighth, Gen. Jackson in his sixty second, Mr. Van Buren in his fifty-fifth, Gen. Harrison in his sixty ninth, Mr. Tyler in his fifty second, Gen. Taylor in his sixty fifth, M. Fillmore in his fifty first, Mr. Buchanan in his sixty-sixth, Mr. Lincoln in his fifty-third, and Mr. Johnson in his fifty seventh year.

Gen. Harrison was the oldest man ever elected to the presidency, and Gen. Grant is the youngest. Washington, Jefferson, Madison and John Quincy Adams were all in their fifty-eighth year when they entered the presidency, and Mr. Monroe completed his fifty ninth year only fifty-five days after he became President, and Mr. Johnson was in his fifty sixth year when he succeeded President Lincoln.

Four Presidents went out of office in their sixty sixth year, namely, Washington, John Adams, Jefferson and Madison, President Jackson was the oldest of all our retiring Presidents, as he went out of office only eleven days before the completion of his seventieth year. Mr. Buchanan left office fifty days before he became seventy years old.

The President who lived longest was John Adams, who died in his ninety first year. The next oldest was Mr. Madison, who died in his eighty sixth year. Mr. Jefferson, died in his eighty-fourth year, John Quincy Adams in his seventy ninth year. The youngest retiring President was Gen. Pierce, who went out of office not quite four months after he had completed his fifty-second year.

Mr. Polk retired in his fifty fourth year, and died in little more than three months later, at the age of fifty three years, seven months and thirteen days, youngest of all our Presidents in death.

AT the annual meeting of the Spring and Benner Township Sabbath School Association, held at Pleasant Gap on Saturday last, it was determined to open a Sunday School Exchange at the Reading Room of the Y. M. C. A. The International Uniform Lesson will be taught there each Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The ministers of the various denominations in the neighborhood of Bellefonte will be responsible for the conduct of these Bible studies. Rev. Mr. Smyser, of the M. E. Church, will teach the lesson, or rather lead the meeting next Saturday P. M. All are invited.

SEVERAL sad cases of infants sleeping with their parents being smothered are recorded in our exchanges. A case of this kind occurred last week at Elizabethtown, Lancaster county.

SUCCESSFUL explorations for iron are being made in Chester county in the interest of certain iron manufacturers of Philadelphia.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS

WISHART'S PINE TREE
TAR CORDIAL,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY FOR THE Throat & Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial for Throat and Lung Diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation (which produces cough) of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act in throw of the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.
The Pine Tree Tar Cordial,
Great American Dyspepsia Pills,
AND WORM SUGAR DROPS!
Being under my immediate direction, they do not lose their curative qualities by the use of cheap and impure articles.

PROPRIETOR.

FREE OF CHARGE.

Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's office Parlors are open on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M., for consultation by Dr. Wm. T. Magee. With him are associated two consulting physicians of acknowledged ability. This opportunity is not offered by any other institution in the city.
